POTATO IMPROVEMENT SOUGHT

Oregon potato growers will be asked to cooperate with the state college experiment station in potato seed treatment and potato spraying next year to improve the yield and quality of the crop. The methods that raised Wisconsin to the first rank in the production of high grade potatoes are being investigated by M. B. McKay, associate plant pathologist of the station, who will adapt them to Oregon conditions. He attended the Wisconsin potato show December 10 and inspected the potato work of the Wisconsin station. He will attend the conference of the potato pathologists of America, reporting the important work he has done on verticillium wilt in Oregon. He will arrange with the committee for carrying on this line of work in Oregon.

Local business people are complaining of receiving checks that are returned because of insufficient funds. The offenders are generally boys who evidently do not realize the gravity of the offense. "In an isolated community such as this, too much stress cannot be laid on the importance of mutual trust in exchanging commercial paper. Such offenders should be taught a lesson of sufficient severity to leave a lasting impression.

Some of the old time residents of this vicinity are recalling the cold winter of 1887-8. The thermometers in use in Burns at that time did not record low enough to really tell how cold it was. But we who experienced it know it was some cold.
